Slow Portraits

An international photography challenge · pinhole camera and long exposure

21 June – 6 September 2026 · 112 Revelats

Slow Portraits: an international photography challenge from Barcelona invites you to portray people with a pinhole camera

112 Revelats, the collective photobook project run by Barcelona-based independent publisher 112Books, launches Retrats Lents (Slow Portraits), a photography challenge devoted to portraiture made with pinhole cameras and long exposures. The open call — free and open to everyone — starts on 21 June 2026, the summer solstice, and closes on 6 September. Selected images will become part of a collective photobook to be published in late October.

WHAT IS 112 REVELATS

112 Revelats is a collective publishing project built around themed photography challenges. Each challenge invites the community to create, share and publish images around a single idea. The best entries are gathered into collective photobooks, published digitally free of charge and — when sponsorship allows — also in limited paper editions.

Driven by 112Books, the project was born from the wish to democratise photobook publishing and build a community around the image, both analogue and digital.

THE CHALLENGE

In a world that keeps speeding up, Slow Portraits proposes slowing down and looking. The challenge consists of making portraits with a pinhole camera, or with any long-exposure technique that forces the photographic process to decelerate: waiting, exposing, developing.

Pinhole photography connects directly with the origins of the medium: a dark box, a tiny hole and a light-sensitive material. No lens, no electronics, no immediacy. A pinhole portrait may require seconds or minutes of exposure.

No professional equipment is needed: a tin can, photographic paper and patience are enough to get started.

"A pinhole portrait isn't taken — it's allowed to happen. The light works slowly, and all you have to do is keep it company."

— Joan Linux, photographer and editor at 112Books
